Regency Exhibition

Firle Place is an outstanding privately owned country house in Sussex that dates from the time of Henry VIII but was substantially remodelled in the 18th Century.

The Firle Estate is the family seat of Nicolas Gage, 8th Viscount Gage, whose family the Viscounts Gage have owned the land at Firle since acquiring it from the Levett family in the 15th century. The Estate has remained intact for over 500 years and encompasses several picturesque downland villages with traditional pubs, a highly regarded farm shop and of course Firle Place itself.

Firle Place contains one of the most significant and historic private collections of old master paintings, furniture and porcelain in Southern England and the only place in the country where a section of the celebrated Cowper collection may be viewed.

Jane Austen's 'Emma' was filmed here recently. This inspired the idea of the Regency Wardrobe exhibition, included in your visit.
